The audience is different.

As a result the visual language changes.

Typography as Visual Language

Typography has a voice.

Typography has a voice.

Font choice affects tone, mood and meaning.

Typography has a voice.

Font choice affects tone, mood and meaning.

The follwing sentences are exactly the same
— only the typography has changed.

You'll always be mine.

YOU'LL ALWAYS BE MINE.

The words haven't changed.

Only the typography has.

The meaning feels completely different.

The words haven't changed.
Only the typography has.
The meaning feels completely different.

Typography choices need to be intentional and justified — they directly affect meaning and audience interpretation.

Visual Hierarchy

---

Visual hierarchy is how designers guide attention.

Visual hierarchy is how designers guide attention.

It helps an audience understand what to look at first, second and last.

Visual hierarchy is how designers guide attention.

It helps an audience understand what to look at first, second and last.

Hierarchy is created through size, contrast, placement and spacing.

You will read this first.

AND YOU'LL
MOST LIKELY LEAVE THIS FOR LAST.

And then you'll probably read
this immediately afterwards.

Why?

Strong hierarchy helps an audience:

- Understand information quickly
- Know what is most important
- Navigate a design with confidence

Hierarchy supports clarity, intention and audience awareness.

Colour and Visual Meaning

When we talk about colour in graphic design, we're not talking about decoration - we're talking about meaning, intention and communication.

When we talk about colour in graphic design, we're not talking about decoration - we're talking about meaning, intention and communication.

Colour influences how an audience feels before they even read anything.

When we talk about colour in graphic design, we're not talking about decoration - we're talking about meaning, intention and communication.

Colour influences how an audience feels before they even read anything.

Colour influences emotion, mood and perception.

Red is highly visible and creates energy and urgency, which is why designers use it when they want to grab attention or prompt action.

Coca-Cola®

Yellow is warm and optimistic. It's often used to attract attention quickly and communicate positivity, especially for younger audiences, but it needs to be used carefully because it can be overwhelming.

Blue has a calming effect and is strongly associated with trust, reliability and professionalism.

Designers often choose blue when they want an audience to feel secure and confident.

Orange combines the energy of red with the friendliness of yellow. It feels confident, energetic and approachable, which is why it's common in for younger audiences and sports branding.

easyJet

Green is closely linked to nature, health and growth. Designers might use green to suggest freshness, wellbeing and environmental awareness.

Black is neutral and powerful. It's often used to create contrast and clarity, and is associated with quality, control and sophistication.

Colour choices should always be intentional.
As designers we need to think about audience,
purpose and message, and be able to explain and
justify our decisions as part of the creative process.

**disclaimer*

While there will always be designers who challenge or break conventions, strong work is still grounded in intentional decision-making.

While there will always be designers who challenge or break conventions, strong work is still grounded in intentional decision-making.

Even rule-breaking choices need to be thought through, justified and reflected on.
